

65-007 Langley Park (NR) (McCormick-Goodhart Mansion)

8100 15th Avenue

Langley Park

Designed in 1924 by leading Washington, D.C., architect George Oakley Totten, Jr., for Anglo-Americans Frederick and Henrietta McCormick-Goodhart, the property was named Langley Park after the Goodhart estate in England. It is one of only three such architect-designed estate houses of this period in Prince George's County. Executed in the Georgian Revival style, the brick and concrete estate mansion is dominated by a two-story pedimented portico with Ionic columns. Abandoned and in disrepair for many years, it has now been restored for use as a multicultural center by CASA de Maryland using federal and state historic building rehabilitation tax incentives.
