Built from 1937–38, Suitland House is a Colonial Revival house with variegated stone veneer; it consists of a side-gabled main block with lower flanking wings. It was built for the family of Lovell O. Minear, a pioneer in the design and management of memorial parks. Within a few years of its completion, the house and adjoining property were acquired by the Federal Government for the development of the Suitland Federal Center. The house is the sole remaining dwelling of 12 that originally stood on the government property. It now serves as office space for the Bureau of the Census. Suitland House is significant not only for its associations with L. O. Minear, but also for its architectural features and landscaped setting within the large federal center.
