Upper Marlboro vicinity

Built circa 1820, possibly earlier wing—Sasscer's Green was a small, one-and-one-half-story, side-gabled frame house of side-hall-and-double-parlor plan; it had freestanding chimneys, an attached kitchen wing, and fine early nineteenth-century decorative detail. The main block was built circa 1820 by Thomas Sasscer. It was a fine example of a small southern Maryland plantation house, transitional between the Federal and Greek Revival styles, but was severely damaged by fire and demolished in 2006.
