11111 Southwest Crain Highway

Cheltenham

Built in 1879, Cheltenham United Methodist Church is a front-gabled frame church building with a three-story centered-entry bell tower, round-arch windows and board-and-batten siding; a cemetery adjoins the church. It was built on land deeded by Julius H. Pyles from his Westwood property. The bell tower was added in 1913, and a classroom wing in 1945. The church is a good example of late nineteenth-century rural church architecture and unusual for its board-and-batten siding.
