17505 Aquasco Road

Horsehead

Built in the early nineteenth century and enlarged in the 1870s, the Horsehead Tavern is a two-story, side-gabled frame building constructed in two stages, and may incorporate an eighteenth-century structure. The north section was built early in the nineteenth century; a central stairhall and south parlor were added circa 1870. The building has been used as a residence since 1900. Long obscured by the trees that screen it from the road, the house is best seen in the early twentieth-century photograph above.
